Mechanism:

1. Awareness is created among staff and students through the institute's web portal, notice boards, and member contact details.

2. Separate web portal icons are available for faculty, non-teaching staff, and students.

xv. Innovation Cell

A startup ecosystem is a network of resources:

The Innovation Cell – Institutional Innovation and Entrepreneurship Development Cell (IEDC) at Methodist College of Engineering and Technology (MCET) plays a pivotal role in nurturing a vibrant startup ecosystem. This ecosystem thrives on the synergy between entrepreneurs, mentors, investors, academic institutions, and industry partners. Methodist College of Engineering and Technology Incubation Centre serves as a catalyst for early-stage ventures, offering structured support to transform innovative ideas into sustainable businesses. Startups with working prototypes receive targeted acceleration through mentorship, access to infrastructure, and guidance on business development, enabling them to scale effectively.

As part of its initiatives, the Incubation Centre organizes ideation contests, entrepreneurship awareness programs in technical institutions, and regular brainstorming sessions that connect founders with advisors, mentors, and potential investors. These activities foster a collaborative environment where students and aspiring entrepreneurs can refine their concepts, build networks, and gain real-world insights. Over the past five years, the Institute has also conducted numerous workshops and seminars on essential topics such as Research Methodology and Intellectual Property Rights (IPR), equipping participants with the knowledge needed to protect and commercialize their innovations.

Complementing these efforts, Methodist College of Engineering and Technology Research and Development (R&D) Cell promotes a culture of inquiry and innovation among students and faculty. Through technical events including paper presentations, expert lectures, conferences, and training programs the Cell creates platforms for knowledge exchange and interdisciplinary collaboration. By integrating entrepreneurship development with academic research, the Institute empowers its community to explore novel ideas, contribute to technological advancement, and actively participate in the broader innovation landscape.

Methodist College of Engineering and Technology (MCET) re-constituted Innovations and Entrepreneurship Development Cell on 04.08.2025 for Academic Year 2025-26
